From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Born in County Leitrim, Ireland, October 8, 1808, William Ewin emigrated with his parents to New York City in 1822. Worked in Baltimore from 1833 to 1840 as a maker of mathematical instruments; an example is shown at the Virtual Museum of Surveying. Married Martha Ann Dennis, 1835. In 1840 moved to Western Ford, Randolph County, Virginia, which today is Saint George, Tucker County, West Virginia. Studied law and lobbied the Virginia Assembly for the formation of Tucker county, accomplished in 1856. Served as Postmaster and County Circuit Clerk until barred from public service in 1861 because he, as did other county officials, supported Virginia's secession from the United States. Used surveying and legal skills to obtain and sell land grants of many thousand acres. After the Presidential and State amnesties of 1868 and 1871 for secessionists, was elected Prosecuting Attorney, then to the West Virginia Senate from 1879 to 1883. Died November 25, 1886, and is buried in the family graveyard overlooking the Cheat River at Saint George.

"William Ewin is listed in the Baltimore directory in 1833 as a mathematical instrument maker at 3 Commerce Street. Baltimore directories from 1833-1836 list William Ewin in partnership with Isaac T. Heartte (life 1785-1836) in the firm of Ewin & Heartte; philosophical, optical and mathematical instrument makers at 53 South Street. October 1836, William Ewin (of the late firm of Ewin & Heartte) 53 South Street. 1840-41, William Ewin mathematical instrument maker 53 South Street."

Some of William Ewin's personal papers are stored at the West Virginia University Library. Included in those papers are a number of letters from customers about his mathematical instruments.

Currently, three railroad goniometers are known to exist within private collections. Two of these were made by William J. Young. One is an incomplete example signed, "Wm J. Young Maker, Philadelphia". The other is signed "Wm J. Young Maker Philadelphia and incorporates a compass with a 4 3/4" straight needle and a short vertical arc capable of reading to 5 minutes. A letter from William J. Young within the Clements Library at the University of Michigan is dated July 27th 1847. Young states, "This week we will have J.M. Brooks' goniometer finished...". Young probably continued to manufacture the railroad goniometer by special-order for many years. The firm of Young & Sons tried to revive the application of the goniometer through advertising as late as 1909.

The third railroad goniometer in extant is signed, "William Ewin, Baltimore Md." It stands 12 1/4" tall and is fit with a single silvered vernier. It is complete with the case which carries the business cards of "F.O. Leffingwell, Civil Engineer, County Surveyor" and Roadmaster on the Chicago branch of the Illinois Central Railroad. Leffingwell died in 1857.

William Ewin first came to public attention in 1833 when, in partnership with Isaac Heartte, he began to manufacture mathematical and optical instruments. As Heartte was a retired sea captain, it is not surprising that Ewin & Heartte traded "At the sign of the Quadrant". Like Young, However, Ewin & Heartte quickly recognized the market potential of the new railroads. Their advertising adjacent to Young's within the American Railroad Journal reads: "Ewin & Heartte at the sign of the quadrant, No. 53 South Street, one door North of the Union Hotel, Baltimore, beg leave to inform their friends and the public, especially engineers, that they continue to manufacture to order, and keep for sale every description of instrument....."

William Ewin continued in partnership until Heartte's death in 1836. The last records for Ewin were in 1840-41, listing him as a mathematical instrument maker, 53 South Street Baltimore.

It is probable that Young's original goniometer design was adapted from an English or French form with which he was already familiar. It appears from the few examples extant that the railroad goniometer was not the instrument of choice by most railroad engineers; The transit instrument being recognized as the preferred instrument. An American treatise on railroad layout dated 1837 states, "The transit is an instrument invented and manufactured by W.J.Young of Philadelphia. It is in many aspects more convenient to use than the Goniometer or the theodolite....." The railroad goniometer became an instrument with undesirable sophistication - ingenious, but not commercially successful.

The 1786 Greenbrier County, (West) Virginia

Personal Property Tax List Index

by Helen Campbell

Greenbrier County was formed from portions of Botetourt and Montgomery Counties. Greenbrier is bounded N. by Nicholas, and Pocahontas, - E. by Bath and Allegheny, - S. by Monroe, - and W. by Great Kanawha, which separates it from Logan. The county is for the most part drained by Greenbrier river, and its tributaries; but from its western border numerous creeks flow northwestwardly into Gauley river, the principal of which is Sewell's creek. It rises in Sewell's Mountain (the highest mountain in this county,) and is one of the extreme southern sources of the Gauley river. The topography is creviced and in some areas mountainous. The most conspicuous is that known by the name Keeney's Nob, on which is a creek which rises near the top of the mountain, runs west and empties into the New River, one mile below Richmond's Falls. The landscape of Greenbrier is rough country. The mountains are sheltered with a growth of large timber of various kinds. The lands are infested with rattlesnake, copperhead, blacksnake. There is an abundance of deer, wild turkey, pheasants, wolves, wild cats, panthers, bears, and a variety of small game. The mean elevation of the farms above the ocean level is at least 1,500 feet.

The Greenbrier River is located east West Virginia. The river rises in the Allegheny Mountains as two headstreams that unite the south of Cass and continue in a SW direction to enter the New River at Hinton. The Greenbrier River is 170 miles long and flows into a picturesque valley through the Allegheny Mountains.

Notes for FRANK CLIFTON DANIEL:

Hello John,

My name is Lynne Daniel Pegelow and I am the great- granddaughter of Deborah Dixon Ewin Lamb and Francis Aughbry Lamb. I was just sent a link to your wonderful web site and wish to thank you for your diligence and generosity in sharing your Ewin information online.

Deborah and Francis Lamb had the three children you refer to in your work but I noticed that you have an incorrect death date for Deborah. Her daughter, Elma (my paternal grandmother) died shortly after the death of my father (Frank Clifton Daniel, Jr.) and I understand Deborah came to live in my grandfather's home and raised his four little children for about 5 years until he remarried in 1919. My records include a death date for her of 13 Jan. 1930 in Washington, DC. Your record shows her death on the date of her husband's death.

I hope this is a help to you.

Good luck in your endeavors. Thanks again.
Lynne

branch of the highway. This church is named after Saint Columba who brought Christianity to Scotland. The church records show on the date July 14, 1822 the marriage of Willaim Ewing and Elinor Maxwell. Certainly the same marriage recorded on page 38 of this book..... JCE September 1983.

169. E-mail from Lynne Pegelow <lpegelow@cox.net, Thu, 19 Oct 2006 16:47:54 -0400, Hello John, My name is Lynne Daniel Pegelow and I am the great- granddaughter of Deborah Dixon Ewin Lamb and Francis Aughbry Lamb. I was just sent a link to your wonderful web site and wish to thank you for your diligence and generosity in sharing your Ewin information online. Deborah and Francis Lamb had the three children you refer to in your work but I noticed that you have an incorrect death date for Deborah. Her daughter, Elma (my paternal grandmother) died shortly after the death of my father (Frank Clifton Daniel, Jr.) and I understand Deborah came to live in my grandfather's home and raised his four little children for about 5 years until he remarried in 1919. My records include a death date for her of 13 Jan. 1930 in Washington, DC. Your record shows her death on the date of her husband's death. I hope this is a help to you. Good luck in your endeavors. Thanks again. Lynne.
